ANNALI' RAINOLDI
This is not a show

The ability to believe that something is true , although we are aware that it is not, the ability to deceive ourselves is an amazing human phenomenon.

Today, in this life, in this world, there is a threshold dangerously blurred between reality and illusion. Self-deception is a useful mechanism to survive and This is not a show exposes these mechanisms.

The man is the synthesis of cynicism and poetry in implementing small deceptions every day . This is not a show is a phenomenology of the human being suspended in a place where deception is the reality and the reality is deception , where the man embodies , dresses and undresses masks representing archaic myths. Now, in this time , in this world, the struggle between rational and irrational shows how we succumb to external forces that act triggering mechanisms of survival.

What degree of awareness we respect ourselves and our actions?
